Customer Reviews

I am a Vet Nurse and some years ago young clients came into the clinic with their Cat and Dog for their yearly physical. The young woman was excited to announce to us she was pregnant and keen to get some tips on making sure her pets would not be adversely affected in any way. You see, well meaning relatives had been telling her horror stories that now she was pregnant she would have to get rid of her pets! Now she knew this was not the case and wished there was some reference she could look at to acclimatise her dog and her cat to the impending arrival. They were my very first customers for Dr Lewis Kirkham's Tell Your Dog You're Pregnant! It is now with much excitement I can direct people to Kirkham's second book Tell Your Cat You're Pregnant. Larger than the original "lets face it, cats are more complicated creatures than dogs (no offense intended) Kirkham has taken the time to not only write this amazing guide for expectant (human) parents on how to enable their fur children to adjust to having new human siblings in the home. Even the pregnancy can be a big deal to our pets and Kirkham addresses all new parents concerns. Not only that but he has collated important sounds that might cause concern for your cat so you can condition the pets to these noises. This book is well written and easy to read and full of practical advice for creating a loving bond between your cat and new baby. The book includes the latest behavioural knowledge and extensive information about transitioning to a larger, harmonious family. It is a must read for any cat owning couple who is expecting a baby " your cat's and baby's future relationship may just depend on it.
